

INT. MEETING ROOM IN AN OFFICE BUILDING.

Steve and Brian enter the room and sit down at a table.

STEVE

I just wanted a quick catch-up with all the project managers. So, how are things progressing with 'Project Shit-storm'?

BRIAN

Yeah, I do have a few concerns Steve. Mainly to do with the name you've chosen for the project.

STEVE

What's wrong with 'Project Shit-storm'? I think it's Ace.

BRIAN

Oh it's definitely...er, Ace. But maybe if we could just replace the word 'Shit-storm' with something else?

STEVE

No way! The Shit-storm stays! This project is a big shake up of the HR department. I want everyone to know that the Shits about to fly.

BRIAN

I appreciate the message you're trying to get across, but I'm still not really happy with the name.

STEVE

OK as a compromise. How about if we replace the word 'Project' with the words 'A big fucking'?

BRIAN

So, I'd be in charge of 'A big fucking Shit-storm'?

STEVE

Brilliant! That's even better.

BRIAN

I don't think you quite understand my objection. It's just that this is going to end up on my CV. I don't want to be sat in an interview one day telling people I was responsible for 'A big fucking shit-storm'.

STEVE

Fair enough Brian. Would you prefer to be moved over to a different project?

BRIAN

I think that would be best.

STEVE

The only other project I have at the moment is 'Operation Bitch Slap'. That's working with Maureen from accounts.

BRIAN

Ah, me and her don't really get on.

STEVE

Yeah she's a bitch. Sometimes these project names just write themselves.
